

She honors her grandmother's memory by tending carefully to her patients.

Internist Dr. Sarah Faaborg keeps her grandmother's favorite gardening hat as a reminder to help her community thrive.

Raised in the tiny town of Malta in Eastern Montana where her family owned the local restaurant, Dr. Faaborg learned early on the importance of listening to make sure that people were happy and comfortable. After witnessing her Grandmother's struggle, not only with Ovarian Cancer that ultimately took her life, but to get her physician to provide her the care she needed, Sarah vowed to become a caring, compassionate physician.

After attending the University of Washington Medical School, and doing her residency at St. Vincent in Portland, Oregon, Sarah has returned to Montana to practice quality, compassionate care for people here in Western Montana. She doesn't just want her community to grow. She wants it to grow healthier.
